

After years of hard work and planning the Cambridge Community Library opened in its new building adjacent to the Amundson Center Monday, July 20. Many were eager to see what the new library will now have to offer with almost three times the space of the old library. There is a children's area, youth reading room, adult reading area with a fireplace, a technology room with a green screen, more computers and plenty of shelves to hold books, CDS and DVDS. More photos of this opening can be seen at www.cambridgeenews.com. Photos by Tristan McGough.

Correction

In the story entitled "New Cambridge Library to open July 20" that appeared in the July 16 edition of The Cambridge News/The Independent, it stated that the Cambridge Foundation gave $200,000 toward the project. That figure was wrong. The group actually gave $100,000 the first year, $100,000 the second year and $125,000 the third year for a total of $325,000 over a three-year period. We apologize for the mistake.

